Grand Structures of Europe by John Holmgren

John Holmgren gave a slide show last month at the Orinda Community Church; here are some excerpts from his talk:

The world is filled with many wonders—some are natural wonders like the alps of Switzerland and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado—some are man-made. Europe certainly, has its share of these and today we are going to visit a few that have made a deep impression on me.

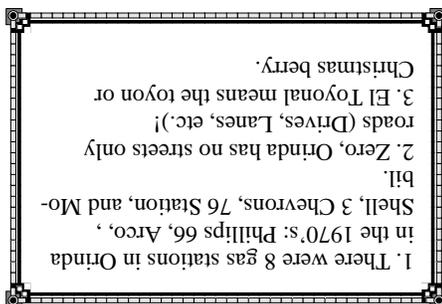

One of the great boulevards of the world is the Champs Elysee in Paris. It extends for some two miles in the heart of the city and was laid out at the end of the 17th century. At its northern end stands the Arc de Triomphe. It was built in honor of Napoleon in 1808 to commemorate his victories over Austria. It is one of the most impressive structures made by man—a majestic creation.

Notre Dame is the great cathedral of the archbishop of Paris. It was founded in 1163 but not finished until the 14th century. On the left side of the central doorway there is a staircase which leads to the top of the north tower. From this there is a fine view of the Seine and the heart of central Paris. From Notre Dame one can walk to Sacre Coeur Cathedral. It is built in the Romanesque-Byzantine style with a dome that is 83 meters high. Another of France's great artistic treasures is the chapel of the Sainte Chapelle also located on the Isle de la Cite. It is in fact two chapels, one over the other, and was built as the palace chapel during the reign of Louis IX to house the Crown of Thorns and other relics brought to France in 1239. The wall surfaces of the chapel are nearly 50 feet high and are almost entirely taken up by windows of vividly colored stain glass. They seem to have no visible means of support but no cracks have ever appeared.

We fly magically now to Spain and the Sagrada Familia in Barcelona, the magnificent church built by Antonio Gaudi. It's curious spires rise over 100 meters above the city. The structure was never complete. Gaudi was killed in a street accident in 1928. In designing this monument Gaudi improvised designs from odd bits of material such as rubble, bricks and polychrome tile.

Our final destination on this brief tour of some of the treasures of Europe is to the south of France to visit the magnificent Pont du Gard. It is located near Remoulins and was built by the Romans at the end of the 1st century A.D. It carried water from the Uzes river to supply the town of Nimes. It is one of the best preserved and longest aqueducts in the world. Perhaps the most amazing thing about the Pont du Gard is that the Romans built it with fairly primitive tools such as picks, shovels, saws and levers. They had no power equipment no engines, no tractors. Despite this they were able to move large blocks of stone into place, and they were put into position without the use of mortar or any binding material. And here it has stood as strong and secure as the time it was built two thousand years ago!
